RESEARCH RESCUE

Upon admission to graduate school, you may find that your research skills are rusty or out of date. Do you

1. Need to learn which databases are best to use in your major?
2. Need to find information quickly?
3. Know where to start your research?
4. Have no idea graduate school is based on research and need help?
5. Need to know more about how to search from home?
6. Worry about succeeding in graduate school after being away from school for several years?
7. Have to teach a class and need to assign resources to your students?
8. Have great research skills, but are afraid you overlooked something?
9. Think graduate school may not have been a good idea?

If you answered “yes”
to any of these questions . . .

RESEARCH RESCUE IS HERE TO HELP!

As a graduate student at Tarleton State University, you can confer with any of the professional librarians from the University libraries' staff.

University librarians are available to help you learn research basics, enhance your existing skills, make suggestions, and guide you to appropriate information and research sources.

YOUR LIBRARIANS' CREDENTIALS

Professional librarians at Tarleton hold a Bachelor's degree in a specialized field and a Master's degree in Library or Information Science and have years of experience working with students. Their backgrounds provide you with knowledgeable guides who are familiar with the research process and a wealth of information resources.
