involved professors

I feel the program really focuses on ethics and does a thorough job on laying a solid foundation for students to be in a great position to thrive in this field. I have had some experience with counseling students outside of Tarleton and Tarleton students have been leaps and bounds above other students I have interned (in my opinion).

I have had all great experiences with students from this program.

Need to emphasize that growth and counseling is a continuous lifelong process as many think they "know it all and

The numerous faculty changes and instability over the past few years has created a very negative image of the program. The employee I have graduated a few years ago. Unfortunately she also had poor supervision and is woefully under skilled as a counselor.
