

David Kattes is a Professor in WSES at Tarleton and is engaged in both agronomy and entomology. His research interests include arthropods of veterinary and wildlife importance and is currently studying the biology and ecology of the spinose ear tick at the Fossil Rim Wildlife Center in Glenrose, Texas. Dr. Kattes is also interested in native pollinator diversity and conservation in the Cross Timbers region of Texas.